Legend has it, coffee was discovered in the Ethiopian highlands by Kaldi the goat herder. It is said that he discovered coffee when he noticed that after eating berries from a certain tree, his goats became so energetic that they wouldn't sleep at night. Kaldi decided to share his findings with a monk who required something that could help him to stay awake all night as he prayed; but another story claims that the monk refused and threw the beans into the fire and the pleasing aroma that came from it was just wonderful. The day was first celebrated in Japan in 1983 and is now celebrated globally as a way to promote fair trade and raise coffee awareness for the plight of the coffee farmers.
